The story of "Rip Van Winkle" was written before and after the American Revolutionary War. The author, Washington Irving, wrote the story of "Rip Van Winkle" during the Romanticism time period too. The main character, Rip Van Winkle, was a Dutch villager. Rip was a nonchalant man who loved the outdoors and is married to a nag. Rip's wife did not appreciate Rip going into the woods all the time, "This, however, always provoked a fresh volley from his wife; so that he was fain to raw off his forces, and take to the outside of the house- the only side which, in truth, belongs to a henpecked husband"(Irving 3). The theme of the story "Rip Van Winkle" is when you don't care about things now, you will be punished for that in the future. No one really believed Rip had any common sense, "Some always pretended to doubt the reality of it, and insisted that Rip had been out of his head and that this was one point on which he always remained flighty"(Irving 10). In the beginning of the story, Rip has a lot of acquaintances, a wife, and children. Rip was good at meeting and associating with new people. In the middle of the story, Rip had to run into people in order to not be lonely, "Though rather shy and distrustful of this new acquaintance, Rip complied with his usual alacrity, and mutually relieving one another, they clambered up a narrow gully, apparently the dry bed of a mountain torrent"(Irving 5). Rip came along another person in the woods and began drinking with him. In the end of the story, no one remembers Rip, and he is a major alcoholic. In the beginning and middle of the story, Dame continues to be the same person. She is a nag who constantly bickers and complains to Rip: "If left to himself, he would have whistled life away in perfect contentment; but his wife kept continually dinning in his ears about his idleness, his carelessness, and the ruin he was bringing on his family"(Irving 3). In the end of the story when Rip wakes up, Dame is dead. Before Rip fell asleep, I can infer that he did not have a lot of facial hair and he wasn't dressed like he was homeless. When Rip woke up he looked like a completely different person: "The appearance of Rip, with his long grizzled beard, his rusty fowling-piece, his uncouth dress, and an army of women and children at his heels, soon attracted the attention of the tavern politicians"(Irving 7). When Rip woke up he was crowded by lots of people. Rip emotionally didn't really care about anything in his own life, and he was an arrogant man: "In a word Rip was ready to attend to anybody's business but his own; but as to doing family duty, and keeping his farm in order, he found it impossible"(Irving 2). Rip was a caring man to his neighbors, so he never refused to assist them. The relationship between Rip and Dame was the complete opposite of the relationship Rip had with his neighbors: "Times grew worse and worse with Rip Van Winkle as years of matrimony rolled on; a tart temper never mellows with age, and a sharp tongue is the only edged tool that grows keener with constant use"(Irving 3). The more years that passed by in Rip and Dame's marriage, the worse their relationship became. Overall, the story "Rip Van Winkle" proves that when you let your life slip away because of laziness, bad things will happen to you.

The theme in "Rip Van Winkle" is about a lazy man that is always nagging at his wife, he wanted his wife to come with him to go hiking to the Kaatskill mountains. When he fell asleep he didn't notice he fell asleep through 20 year , everything was different when he woke up, he was feeling confused on what was all happening that why did he end up here somehow. They have both something in common though, they both nags there wife's to go do something. In the beginning of the story he was trying to get his wife to go to the mountains, but she didn't want to. In the middle of this story he fell asleep in the woods and he woke up after 20 years has past, he was all confused and he didn't know how this happened. At the end of this story he figured all that has been happening. When he woke up in the woods his emotions were all confused.

Adding a question works great for guided reading questions. You can also add the audio book for students who need this feature. I have also had students add comments or questions about the portion of reading for that day.
